Fund Performance

The Fund delivered a strong return over the June quarter, adding to the positive performance of the previous quarter. Most major asset classes rose over the period to end the 2018-19 financial year on a high.

Developed market shares rose 3.5% over the period (in local currency terms), boosted by the increasing likelihood of monetary policy easing by central banks to combat slowing global growth. Emerging market shares ended the period flat as strong resource prices and broadly positive sentiment were offset by uncertainty about the geopolitical environment, particularly US actions on trade in May and early June. Australian shares outperformed most major share markets, returning 7.8% over the quarter, helped by the re-election of the Coalition Government and a reduction in the official interest rate by the Reserve Bank of Australia.

The performance of alternative strategies was mixed, with hedge funds performing well, but style-based strategies lagging. Property and infrastructure assets also rose, supported by falling global interest rates.

Market Review

Global equities remained resilient during the quarter, despite the International Monetary Fund downgrading global growth forecasts. However, the risks around growth and the strong gains in shares this year have increased the probability of a correction. Central banks are retaining their bias towards accommodative measures as visibility on growth fades.

Despite the rise in equity values, there has been some flight-to-safety as trade war and geo-political risks increase, and this has seen bond yields fall, resulting in a positive correlation between bond and equity prices.

Despite the ongoing global trade tensions, hopes remain that a practical and sustainable resolution to the US-China dispute will be reached. However, market optimism is fragile and there remain significant risks. The US's approach appears to be widening in scope if anything, with its removal of India's preferential trade status and associated implementation of tariffs. In addition, the potential for armed conflict between the US and Iran has heightened the geo-political risk environment. There were thus great expectations for positive communications and outcomes for world trade at the G20 meeting in Japan at the tail-end of the quarter, particularly from sideline talks between country heads.

Outlook

While the returns experienced over the first half of 2019 have been impressive, they are likely to moderate in the next half of the year. Most of the strength year-to-date has been driven by an expectation that easing monetary policy and fiscal stimulus will prolong the already historic length of this market cycle and support economic growth. To see meaningful upside from here, there needs to be signs that global growth is reaccelerating and geopolitical risks, like the US-China trade dispute, are resolving. A more likely scenario is that markets will trade sideways until the outlook for global growth becomes clear. We hold a broadly neutral exposure to shares, having increased our allocation to Australian shares as easing monetary policy should be supportive.
